Boomerang is a relatively new social media giant's Instagram app that breaks the boundaries of what social media content should be. As? Well I quote instagram, it's not a photo. It's not a gif. It's Boomerang. Boomerang works by taking super short, super-fast burst shots and stitching them together in a mini-video that plays back and forth, and well, you get an idea. The app first gained momentum with social media influencers (such as the Jenner sisters) and even sparked friendly competition among other popular photo editing programs. VCSO, an app for photo editing for more serious iPhoneographers, recently introduced DSCO, a free GIF development program developed using VSCO's superior imaging technology. But one thing that gave Instagram with Boomerang, is that when users upload their own directly to your account, a little message automatically appears under the video saying: Made with Boomerang (which is also a useful tool to avoid getting comments like Woah holy fog that isbsthing!veesenhowdolmakeone? or NEW EDITING APP WHAT'S DIS?) We can earn commissions on purchases using our links. learn more, find out more. If you haven't heard of Boomerang before, you've probably seen one on social media at least once or twice, or more precisely instagram. It's not a photo. It's not a gif. It's Boomerang. (Instagram) Boomerang works by taking super short, super-fast burst shots and stitching them together in a mini-video that plays back and forth, and well, you get an idea. While this looks pretty straight ahead, shooting a decent/semi-entertaining Boomerang can actually be a bit of a challenge. You want to add enough movement that it catches someone's eye as they scroll down their news, but not too much that everything is a busy, unpleasant mess. Fortunately, there are some different tips and tricks that you can keep in mind to take pictures that Boomerang your Insta Stories or your time zone accordingly. Here's everything you need to know when photographing the perfect Boomerang! Less is more (but more is more, too) The beauty of boomerang is that it loops and repeats endlessly, making even the most menial task very entertaining to watch! Some of the most interesting and interested Boomerangs that I've ever seen were as simple as someone cutting a simple white piece of soft cheesecake, or dropping a brightly colored bathroom bomb into your bath, or even snapping a simple selfie instead of traditional photos: it doesn't have to be complicated, it just needs to have a little change so we can catch the screen! In addition to sometimes having great, over-the-top boomerangs of busy, noisy, loud things can also be great fun to watch (if they do it properly, of course). You can snap a boomerang from a huge fireworks sky, going at different times, people screaming, dancing and moshing at a concert, or hundreds of ants when they scurry up and down your on the hill: It can be tricky, it just has to be clear what we see, and your phone needs to be steady. Learn that layer something that can make Boomerang successful is having different layers of aka different things happening at different heights in your Boomerang. This can remove an otherwise boring Boomerang and give your audience an excuse to rewatch your masterpiece over and over again! For example, if you're taking a boomerang of your buddy diving into the water by the pool but don't quite get the best moment that his head hits the water, it might seem kind of crummy and you probably don't want to waste your time shooting it over and over again. Instead, get 2 or 3 friends to jump at the same time / make a funny face / poke your head out of the pool O Your main thing if you are jumping, so if one of your good time gags doesn't work, the other is bound! Also, if you're worried that what you're taking might be too boring for Boomerang, you can take a step back, corner the camera and make your photo more interesting to cut that piece of cake, the waiter walks or your friend in front of you makes a face. If you start thinking about you instagram boomerangs as mini movies with different details that people can catch, if you pay attention, it separates martin scorsese Boomerang creators from michael bay boomerang creators. Boomerang, that selfie in Boomerang dat selfie, or not a Boomerang dat selfie, that is the question (Shakespeare, probably) Let's face it: Everyone loves to hate/love/hate to love selfies, but at the end of the day, they're a fad that has survived for a few years and it looks like they're here to stay. Also, there really is no excuse to be bored, semi-assed selfies with the same camera angles, the same background, the same make-up, at the same blah, blah, blah. But Celia! I hear you say: I don't want to change camera angles, backgrounds and make-up! This is how I get my perfect selfies always! ! To which I reply: Then just take Boomerang! Boomerang-ing your selfies are really a great way to break down your selfie-infested news: they're more focused on attracting their movements, they're not super long, drawn from selfie/photoshoot videos like some people (cough beyonce cough), and they are a great way to show little information that can now be seen in a selfie. Instead of snapping a tedious selfie of a new lipstick, take Boomerang to put it on. Instead of editing your selfie with shimmering, heavenly earrings, take a selfie of you with them shining in the sun. Instead of showing off a denim coat with ten buttons in a regular ol' selfie, capture Boomerang to put on a coat. Stable your phone As a cinematography, the key to creating a stunning, charming, interesting image is the darn - not from the subject you take (well, sometimes, but we'll get to it in a second), but from you and your camera when you take a photo. When everything moves and changes, the only way to counteract chaos is daring. (Kristin Armstrong) Keeping your iPhone steady while shooting, you can let the theme in front of you do all the moves/keep things interesting. Later, you can also have your main theme stand perfectly still, and everything happens around them, like those 90's music videos (you know what I mean). Regardless of how and where you choose to have movement in your Boomerang, it's important to remember that your iPhone should be steady. If you want to move your iPhone a little, make sure it's simple, easy to move: quickly scroll up and down or left and right, bring your phone as if you're zooming in on your phone tilt your phone a little to slightly distort the perspective, etc. Practice, experiment, practice While it may seem silly to plan things only for a social media post, it's the attention to detail that separates Instagrammers with a couple hundred followers and those who have a few thousand. If you have a really, really good idea of Boomerang and you know it's a little more complicated or over the top, then there's no shame in practising and improving it before posting it on your Instagram feed. Heck, even outtakes can be hilarious for your Instagram Stories! Another thing to keep in mind is that if you experiment with different things when it comes to Boomerangs - try to take pictures with lenses, try to shoot with a tripod, try shooting while doing a backflip, try to shoot underwater, etc. - you may be lucky and find another big Boomerang fad! At the end of the day, the most important thing to keep in mind when it comes to shooting Boomerang is to stay creative and get weird with what you're trying to shoot. After all, you never know what looks good until Boomerang made it real! How to shoot the perfect Boomerang? Are you someone who has some go-to Boomerang tricks up their sleeve? Is there a gadget or gizmo that you like to shoot your boomerangs with? Let us know what your top tips and tricks for the great Boomerang are in the comments below and we'll be sure to try 'em out!
